The Great Trials of History

Trial of Brigham Young.

When Brigham Young died on Wednesday afternoon, August 26, 1877, at Salt Lake City, eighteen wives sat in the house of mourning bewailing the loss of their husbands, and when he was buried on the following Saturday morning, the tears of eighteen weeping widows watered his grave. Not were these the only springs of sorrow whose flood-gates were opened, for there were the tears of twenty-eight daughters to mingle with the eighteen wives, and sixteen sons, besides an army of 16,000 saints, all of whom felt a personal loss in their great leader.

Brigham Young was chosen the head of the Mormon Church in August, 1840, but it was not until August 22, 1842, that he introduced the doctrine of polygamy as a tenet of the church. He claimed that a revelation, commanding it had been made to Joseph Smith, and the widow and four sons of Smith denied that they had ever seen or heard of any such revelation.

When Young began taking unto himself one wife after the other, the government resolved to put a stop to it. In 1845, President Buchanan, in 1857, sent a Governor to the Territory and an armed force of 2,500 men to protect him. This started a reign of terror in that section, and they were not a few church-inspired murders.

Peace between Young and the Washington government was restored in 1850, and the Federal troops were withdrawn. The fight of the United States government against polygamy began with the Morrill bill of 1860, which was passed in 1862. The measure was ineffective because the conviction of a polygamist could not be had from Mormon juries.

On October 2, 1871, Brigham Young was arrested in Salt Lake City upon the indictment of the grand jury charging him under the Utah statute, with living with sixteen different women. The arrest was made by United States Marshal Patrick at the residence of Young. Owing to the illness of the prisoner, he was allowed to remain at his house that night in charge of a deputy marshal. The penalty imposed by the statute on conviction of this charge is imprisonment of not over ten years nor less than six months, and a fine of not over $5,000.

Several other arrests of polygamists followed, and the trial lasted through October. Judge McKenna heard the evidence, and the first person convicted was Elder Howerd. This was a test case, and virtually placed all polygamists at the mercy of the first wife, who it was shown, was the only party who could institute proceedings against the husband.

Brigham Young was never brought to trial on this charge, on account of his having fled the city on October 24. It was an opportune time, for several days later warrants were sworn out for the arrest of himself, as well as his son, on the charge of ordering the shooting and no one but his most intimate friends knew where the trial of Young for murder was set for Monday, December 4. The trial was not held, although the Mormons had assured the court that they would have Brigham present.

It was not until January 2, 1872, that Brigham Young returned to Salt Lake City, and surrendered himself. He was arrested and was admitted to bail on account of his extreme age, seventy-one years, and he was made a prisoner in one of his houses, which was guarded. It was decided to continue the case until the March term of court.

There were several preliminary trials, but the friends of the prophet were able to have them postponed from time to time, and the last indictment was in October, 1872, when Young's case was pronounced in one of his houses, which was guarded. It was decided to continue the case until the March term of court.

LITTLE "TANGO" NECKLACES, SO-CALLED, ARE NOW QUITE POPULAR.

and clean, stow them in this drawer. You will find it a great comfort to have cleaning cloths for every purpose ready at hand.

Do not throw away skewers—either the metal or wooden kind. The metal ones are excellent for turning broiling steaks and chops (making only one puncture, where a fork makes two)—also for lifting boiled and roasted potatoes.

The wooden skewers are a godsend at housecleaning time—with the point of one of these inserted in a cloth, corners of the window panes, sashes and other hard-to-get-at places can be easily cleaned. Skewers are also a great help in keeping clean the places where the handles and spouts join the bodies of the kitchen utensils, and where grease and grime so easily settle.

If you will have your dining-room table finished without varnish, or shellac—that is, with what is called the oil finish—you can discard the straw or asbestos mats which you have found necessary to use under hot dishes. For, with this oil finish, hot dishes can be set directly on the table without marking it.

It will be found a simple matter to mend a hole in a small boy's trouser pocket if a darning egg is slipped into the pocket and the darning done over it.

WORKED WONDERS SPITE OF UNBELIEF

"At First I Had No Faith," Says Mother, "But Soon There Was Such a Change."

Ontario, Va.—Mrs. M. L. Anderson, of this town, gives out the following for publication: "I went to Richmond seeking relief, and tried almost everything in the medicine line, but nothing proved a cure until I tried Cardui, the woman's tonic. I had indigestion very bad, and a complication of diseases.

Although at first I had no faith in it, I bought a bottle of Cardui; but soon there was such a change. I was certainly benefited. I felt so different! Then I began to take the medicine in earnest. Now I can do my work and eat and sleep like a young person.

Cardui also cured my daughter of womanly troubles. I keep Cardui in the house all the time. It is a great blessing to all women who need it."

Thousands of ladies have written like Mrs. Anderson, telling of the wonders worked by Cardui in the relief of various forms of weakness and distress, after other remedies had failed to help.

Isn't it likely that you will be helped by Cardui, this remedy which has been in constant successful use for more than half a century? Its record of years of success in relieving troubles such as your own is proof that it will help you, too.

Try Cardui.

THE SKY IN APRIL

The sun continues its northward march, but with decreasing speed. Mercury is a morning star. Illumination increases from two-fifths to three-fourths.

Venus is an evening star, but still too near the sun for convenient observation. Disk practically full. Superior conjunction was on February 11.

Mars is slowly advancing. It is about 4 1-2 degrees south of Pollux on the 14th, 2 1-2 degrees north of Neptune on the 21. Near moon on the 4th. It will be seen that both hemispheres of Mars are observable, but the northern one is best placed.

Jupiter is still rather badly placed, having been in conjunction with the sun on January 20. It is a morning star.

Saturn is approaching the sun, but is still observable as an evening star. The ring is approaching its maximum opening, and projects beyond the poles of the planet. It is interesting to measure the exact amount of overlap. The absolute maximum opening will occur on June 1, but the planet will then be too near the sun to see.

There will be a total solar eclipse on August 27 next. It may be best seen in Norway, Sweden and Russia. The eclipse may also be seen from the Aland Islands, or Dago or Oesel, but the accommodation for tourists is probably primitive. In Russia the most accessible points are Riga, Minsk, Kiev and the Crimea.

Grains in a morning star, but badly placed, having been in conjunction with the sun on January 28.

Sandwiches prepared in advance of spring time can be kept as fresh as when made by wrapping them in a napkin wrung out in hot water and then placing in a cool place.

Tomato seeds of the earliest variety should be planted in a box in the house about the first of May.

Cutting the bread at the table is a real economy, as the practice saves many slices from becoming stale.

Be Beautiful

Caring for the Teeth and Mouth.

BY ABIGAIL MOORE.

A San Francisco dentist declares that irregularities and malformations of the teeth have a great deal to do with mental states. Certain it is that the condition of the teeth has a direct influence upon health and beauty.

Even the saliva is never absolutely neutral. Besides, the teeth are susceptible to the temperature and composition of every bit of food that passes the lips. The care of the teeth and mouth cannot be too exacting either for health or looks.

The former should be brushed twice as well as out, always with an up and down movement, after every meal, as well as before retiring, and the latter rinsed with an antiseptic wash. It is very necessary that the dentifrice and wash suit the condition of the saliva. For instance, if the saliva is alkaline, an acid dentifrice is required; if acid, then an alkaline. This can be determined by touching the tongue to a bit of litmus paper. If acid it will turn the paper a reddish hue, and if alkaline, blue.

The rule of lemons and other alkaline fruits eaten freely will counteract the alkaline state. The following is an alkaline dentifrice that will correct acidity:

Dissolve twenty grammes of table salt in 800 grammes of distilled water and pour it slowly over twenty grammes of alcoholate of peppermint beaten in twenty drops of essence of oil of lavender. The care of the mouth and throat with two grammes of carbonate of soda.

Some dentifrices, as the following, are neutral and can be used with safety unless the acid or alkaline state of the mouth is extreme. Mix seventy-five grammes each of tincture of orange root and spirit of rose and 100 grammes of 50 per cent alcohol. If there is a hint of subacidified hydrogen in the breath, a wash containing chloride of potash should be prepared at once of the dentist and used freely, as the condition presages black decay.

Clair Rochester, the beautiful young actress, offers her tried and true antiseptic mouth wash, and it is indeed a valuable one. Mix the two solutions and add immediately fifteen grains each of orange flower water and oil of peppermint.

To effectively preserve them from the ravages of these insects thoroughly beat the furs with a thin tannin and air them for several hours; then carefully comb them with a clean comb, wrap them up in newspapers (moths dislike the printing ink of newspapers) perfectly tight, and put them away in a thoroughly tight chest, lined with tin or cedar wood.

CONGOLAND COLONY GETS MORE LATITUDE

Circumlocution and Administrative Trammels Done Away With in New Legislation.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

It is to a jacksass that the bill now before the legislature at Brussels, providing a certain amount of autonomy for the Congo-Belgian colony of Congoland, is really due.

It seems that last year it was decided by the Colonial Department at Brussels that it would be well to start breeding donkeys in Congoland, as particularly suited for transport purposes, seeing that they are immune to the tsetse fly, and to those other ills with which are so fatal to horses and cattle in that part of the Dark Continent. Accordingly, a couple of dozen magnificent she-asses were dispatched to the province of Kasai, where the stud farm and breeding establishment was to be located.

In some unaccountable manner, neglected to provide any donkeys of the masculine persuasion. This omission was not realized until the she-asses had been sent to the province.

A worthy missionary in that part of the world, owning a fine jacksass, offered the authorities at Kasai to ship his steed up to their stud farm, on the understanding that he should receive in exchange one of the jennies. The authorities at Kasai were most anxious to agree to the deal, but stated that they could not make the exchange without having previously secured official consent from the Colonial Department at Brussels.

The matter was, therefore, referred all the way home to Belgium, in order to receive the approval of the Minister of the Colonial Department, J. Renkin, and it was not until he had given his signature, and that the memorandum bearing it had arrived in Kasai, that the missionary's jacksass was finally allowed to take up its quarters there, twelve months having elapsed in correspondence and red tape about the matter.

Brought by Minister Renkin to the notice of King Albert, the latter, struck by the absurdity of the whole affair, insisted that Renkin and the remainder of the Cabinet should draft a bill providing for the removal of the jacksass to be submitted to the legislature, with a view of allowing a great deal more latitude to the local authorities, and at the same time doing away with all the circumlocution and administrative trammels which are at present restricting and interfering with the development and prosperity of the colony.

According to dispatches from Rome, the Italian authorities have decided to institute criminal proceedings against Don Francesco Massari, Duke of Fabrigio, head of an ancient ducal house of Ferrara, on his return from the United States to his home in Florence, and to arrest him on charges of bigamy.

In 1888 the duke married Dona Emmanuela Notariabartolo, sister of the Sicilian Duke of Villarsora, who has for a number of years been engaged in business in New York, and prominently concerned in the organization and flotation of companies for the development of rubber concessions in the Orient.

Becoming infatuated with a woman of the name of Florence, Don Francesco determined upon getting rid of his wife, so as to be in a position to contract a new matrimonial alliance with the object of his affection. As the Italian code of laws does not provide for divorce, he secured a naturalization in Hungary, so as to be able to apply to the courts there for a dissolution of his marriage.

The Hungarian tribunals granted the divorce, but reversed the decree on appeal by the Duchess Emmanuela, on the ground that a number of the European governments, including those of Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, the Netherlands and Sweden, had reached an agreement through the international courts of the Hague, to refuse to grant divorces in cases where recourse is had to living in a dry, dry place.

their tribunals in order to obtain decrees which the parties would be unable to obtain in their native land. In one word, the governments in question have determined that they will not permit their tribunals to be made an instrument for the evasion of the laws of other countries.

The Duke of Fabrigio, in consequence of the publicity which his Hungarian divorce case had received throughout the European press, found it impossible to secure a dissolution of his marriage from the courts of Switzerland, France, or, indeed, of any other country of the Old World. So he crossed the Atlantic, managed to obtain a divorce from the courts of the United States, and on the strength of that has contracted a marriage in this country with the object of his infatuation.

As he proposes to return to Florence with her, the Italian authorities have, according to the dispatches, decided to proceed against him for bigamy, prompt judgment being deemed essential to secure a dissolution of the marriage.

The Duke's father, who died some years ago, bore the Christian name of Galeazzo, and was a Senator of the kingdom, and incidentally the cause of the revision of the laws exempting members of the upper chamber from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals, where minor offenses are concerned.

It seems that one day an ex belonging to the late duke escaped from its pasture, and strayed along the railroad line from Ferrara to Rimini. The police captured the animal, and the local courts decreed a fine against the duke for negligence, in allowing his ox to stray on the railroad line, thereby endangering traffic.

But the lawyer of the duke carried the case to appeal, and demanded a reversal of the judgment, on the ground that the duke, being a member of the Senate, was, according to the terms of the national Constitution, exempt from the jurisdiction of all tribunals, save that of the senate sitting as a high court of justice.

The court of appeal had no alternative but to admit the contention; and, in view of the prospect of the upper chamber of the Italian senate, being convoked for a state trial of the duke, in consequence of the erratic conduct of his ox, it was determined to have the appeal set aside, and the immunity of Senators from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals should be restored to cases of felony.

This is the practice followed in England. Thus, I recall the case of the late Earl of Egmont being brought before one of the London police courts and fined for being drunk and disorderly conduct, while the present Earl of Cork was in former years repeatedly fined by these same tribunals, owing to the fact that his lordship, in an insane rambling, drove a horse-drawn cab at a furious rate through the streets of London, after he had pitched the hackman from his perch.

But when the Earl Russell surrendered himself, technically guilty of bigamy, which is a felony, some years ago, the entire House of Lords had to be constituted as a high court of justice, under the great seal of the realm, in order to try, convict and sentence him to a term of imprisonment.

After the cork of the glue bottle has been removed, do not use it again, but in its place insert a stick of candle. It will not stick and the glue will not spill or get dry.

A chesscloth bag with a drawing string at the top will be found a very satisfactory thing in which to keep bits of dry bread. The bag should be hung in a dry, dry place.
